

Farts, etc.

When you fart, you can say:

I farted.

To put it crudely... I farted (a term men use).

Or, if you say:

I farted, etc.

...it sounds vague, but ultimately...it means I farted.

Incidentally, when you see or meet someone in various fields who you think is "amazing," you think, "Okay...I'll aim for that too."

...Imitation is the best way to improve, and naturally, you start thinking about improving your own skills (having a clear goal), without considering anything else.

If you happen to see or hear someone playing a street piano directly...

...you think, "Okay, I'll do that too."

The violinist at String Space is a good example.

In any case, when it's a serious matter that cannot be stated definitively, I believe it's best to avoid putting it into writing. It's typical of me to rely solely on my feelings and not record them.
