I looks like a young rich lady, but

When I was little, there was a tall French doll with an unusually large skirt inside a round, transparent cylindrical case at my parents' house.

Back then, I just thought it was a doll of a foreign woman with an unusually small head...

I wasn't old enough to think about whether she was American or European, but

I would definitely sell it now.

There was also an unusually large tiered display stand and dolls for the Hina Matsuri festival.

Back then, I just thought it was the kind with an unusually large number of old men serving as servants...

I would definitely sell it now.

There was background music too.

"Oh, my lord... with a prim and proper face."

If it were available now, I would definitely sell it.

She looks like a lady from a wealthy family, but in the past, she received numerous fraudulent approaches from all over the world. Some were elaborate, and some were so convincing that anyone would fall for them 100%.

An elderly woman from some Arab country was lying on her bed in a hospital room, saying, "I'm leaving all my inheritance and property to you." The message included a photo of a large suitcase at an airport, heavily secured with yellow tape, showing a large amount of cash inside. The message, in English, said something like, "To send this large sum of money... please pay me the shipping fee." One might finally realize it's a scam, thinking, "Why not just take the shipping fee out of this suitcase?"

By the way,

① When there are mistakes or inefficiencies, give clear advice.

Even if it's the president or your boss, this should be in line with the company's profit-first principle.

Furthermore, the priority should be on the front lines that generate profits.

I say things like this almost every day.

② However, this is different for civil servants (Self-Defense Forces, police, coast guard, etc.) which are structured by rank.

The orders of superiors are absolute.

If ① is impossible, then ② might be a good choice

Sapporo Odori Station Underground Shopping Mall

It might be a type of mold caused by the air conditioning system running.

If some people react to it and others don't, it reminds me of the smell inside trains on rainy days, like the Yamanote Line in Tokyo.

There still hasn't been an article about the cause.

Does that mean it's nothing serious, so nothing's been written about it?

Given the history of the Tokyo subway sarin attack, it's probably best to be overly cautious in the initial response to a strange odor like this.

In my case,

the coffee milk is from Secoma (a convenience store chain), and it's somehow different.
